PORTFOLIO REVIEW

The Glennon Small Companies portfolio returned (-3.93%) in December, compared to its benchmark S&P/ASX Small Ordinaries Accumulation Index of (-3.07%), trailing behind the index by (-0.86%). Australian smaller companies were sold off in December with many of the larger more growth-oriented companies being impacted the most. There was some positive momentum in the micro-cap end of the market, with some of our smaller market cap companies showing positive returns in a period where the overall small cap market was down.

The main contributors to performance were Kelly Partners (+12.42%), Technology One (+3.64%), Sequoia Financial (+13.24%) and Dropsuite (+8.16%). For the micro-cap companies, the portfolio showed some resilience in what was a weak month for the index. Dropsuite was upgraded by several analysts during the month as the quality of their recurring revenue streams is starting to gain wider recognition in the market. There was no other noteworthy news from other companies that performed well in what was a quiet news month leading into the close of the calendar half year.

The main detractors from performance were Zip Co (-13.45%), Sandfire Resources (-10.51%) and Ventia Services (-20.88%). As mentioned earlier, the larger more growth-oriented companies in the portfolio were sold off during the month, however while valuations on some of these companies are at the fuller end, we have not reduced our weightings in these companies, as we are comfortable with the longer term prospects for them, however we do expect there to be continued volatility in some of these names. Ventia was embroiled in allegations from the ACCC over price fixing. While it is not positive for the company, we believe that there has always been some level of "co-operation" amongst the players in the market. If the ACCC is successful in its civil claim, there will be financial penalties incurred by the company. What is uncertain at this stage is if the allegations will impact the high level of contract renewals that the company achieves, more so with regulated bodies. The company has not provided any commentary at this stage in relation to the allegations. There is $350m cash on the balance sheet, so the company has the resources to meet any penalty if there should be one applied. At this stage, we are reviewing the investment and the impact that a negative outcome could have on the company.
